GRÍMSEY

ISLAND ON THE ARCTIC CIRCLE

2022-2023

Grímsey – The unique Arctic Island

Grímsey is situated on the Arctic Circle 41 kilometres off the North coast of Iceland. It is 5.3 square kilometers and 5.5 kilometers long. The island is formed by volcanic rock which in places creates beautiful basalt pillars. On the East side the island rises to 105 meters above sea level but is lower on the West side by the island's harbour and village. On a clear day there are spectacular views from the island over to the Icelandic mainland. Grímsey has been inhabited since the Viking settlement of Iceland. Its abundant resources of fish and birds were widely renowned. A legend ties the name of the island to a settler named "Grimur" who sailed from the "Sogn" district in Norway, but there may be other explanations for the name which also occurs in Scandinavia and the UK. In the past the island was owned by monasteries on the northern mainland and the island's farmer tenants had to pay them the annual rent in dried cod.

The Village

The present population is around 70 inhabitants. Subsistence farming, bird hunting and egg gathering were formerly of great importance to the locals. This has greatly changed in recent years as the focus has shifted on to modern style fishing methods and fish processing for international markets. For Grímsey, tourism is a growing industry, giving locals new opportunities for employment. A shop, guesthouses, campsite, gallery, café, restaurant and a swimming pool are some of the facilities on the island. Regular flights from Akureyri and ferry links from Dalvík, year round, makes visiting easy.

Flora and fauna

Grímsey is covered with vegetation which is sculpted by the arctic climate. The scurvy-grass which grows amongst the coastal rocks is very special as it is rich in vitamin C and is known for its medicinal properties. The birdlife is unique with numerous different species and unusually dense populations. The birdlife is flourishing on the island due to a decrease in hunting of the birds and the collection of their eggs. There are unique opportunities for photographers. Seabirds nesting on high cliffs to the East side of Grímsey and on the West coast, one of the biggest colonies of puffins in Iceland with thousand of individuals. The puffins stay out on the open sea during winter but come to their nests after mid April. They fly away after the first week of August. So the best time to watch them in Grímsey is May, June and July.

Culture

Grímsey is renowned for its cultural activities despite its small population. The islanders were well known for their proficiency in chess. In the 19th century. A wealthy American scholar and chess enthusiast, Mr. Daniel Willard Fiske sailed past the island and was intrigued by the lifestyle of the inhabitants and their love of chess. It prompted him to donate a chess set to every home and he also donated a considerable amount of money to the community to support their future endeavours. The islanders celebrate his memory every year on his birthday on the 11th of November. In the library on the island you can see some of the gifts from Fiske, books, photos and chess set.

The Arctic Circle

The Arctic Circle crosses Iceland only in one place, that is on the island Grímsey. At summer solstice in June each year the sun stays visible there for 24 hours. The position of the Arctic Circle is not fixed and moves northwards along the island. Therefore two symbols for the Arctic Circle can be found on the island. The original one is a kind of a bridge at 66°33'N close to the airport and the new one is a huge concrete sphere, 3 meters in diameter which was inaugurated in September 2017. The artwork will be moved once a year according to the movement of the Arctic Circle. To get there by foot takes about 3 hours (roundtrip) from the village. Partial transport can be arranged (pre-book recommended). Three marked "century stones" can be found on the island displaying the position of the Arctic Circle 1717, 1817 and 1917.

The Church of Grímsey

One of the early Catholic bishops of Iceland, Jón Ögmundsson consecrated a church on Grímsey in the 11th century. It was dedicated to St. Olaf, the patron saint of Norway. Sadly, the old church from 1867, was destroyed by fire in the autumn of 2021. No valuables could be saved from the church which burned to ashes in only 20 minutes. A new church will be build on the site, including a vestry and restrooms, which the old one lacked. Fundraising for the new church is ongoing

Walking paths

A good place to start a walking tour of Grímsey is at the small terminal building. The path follows the cliffs of Bäsavík. From there the path leads to the northern most point of the island and then on to the eastern high cliffs. This path runs all the way to the lighthouse on the southern end of the island. From the lighthouse one should walk towards the harbour at Sandvík, passing by the church. There is plenty of opportunity for wildlife and landscape photography during this hike.

Warning! Please refrain from standing too near the edge of cliffs and high ground bordering the sea, as the nest burrowing puffins might have loosened and destabilised the ground, causing danger of falling over the edge.

Grímsey and Akureyri

In the spring of 2009 the inhabitants of both Grímsey and Akureyri voted to unite their two communities under the town council of Akureyri, won by a great majority. The islands of Hrisey and Grímsey both are now under the council of the town of Akureyri. For further information: www.visitgrimsey.is. Phone: (+354) 450 1050. E-mail: info@visitakureyri.is.
